“ Hey Grandpa it's Christina. I never knew I could come to this and comment. I'm building a family tree and that's is how I found this. Grandma recently sent pictures of memories even I had forgotten about. It's made me think of you all a lot more recently. I honestly cannot believe you're gone. It's so surreal. We all know death is apart of life but I guess it's a little different to grasp when the person is actually gone. I wish I would have got to have the relationship with you that other grandkids have with their grandparents. I wish a lot of things could have been different. I wish from my end I would have tried more. I got caught up in my own life. I hate to know you had cancer. I am glad you're not in pain anymore. I should have made a point to come visit you!!! I cannot change it now tho so I guess it doesn't matter. I just realized I haven't even processed your death. I chalked it up to "I didn't talk to you all" So that's why it didn't seem it bother me. I see now it does bother me. I didn't expect to cry coming across this but I am. It's the first time I have cried over it at all or even begin to process it. I guess cause processing it means I actually have to accept it. I still don't talk to grandma. I tried to reach out when she sent those pictures to me but I got no response. I stopped talking to her a long time ago for my own reasons. I do hate it's that way tho. I use to want to have a close relationship with her so bad. Regardless of us talking I hope she is doing well especially after the loss of you. I worry about her because of that. I know you're watching over her tho. I heard she's up their with Adam, his wife and their daughter. I know that probably has helped her with everything. Watch over my mom too. She took it really hard when she got the news. I know she has regrets. Anyways I figured I would take a minute to talk to you. Regardless of everything I do love you. Rip and fly high!!!
